

Guided Self – Determination

A Professional Development Program for Diabetes Educators

An empowerment intervention for the self-management of diabetes, delivered online by diabetes educators

This exciting professional development opportunity is being conducted by Deakin University specifically for diabetes educators and is endorsed by ADEA. Successful program completion will enable you to utilise Guided Self Determination (GSD) online with your clients.

The Guided Self-Determination (GSD) method is designed to guide adults with diabetes (Type I and Type II) to enjoy a healthier life through self-reflection and interactions in 4-6 conversations online with diabetes educators.

The GSD method is an evidence-based program for adults to self-manage the complexity of living with diabetes. The GSD method emphasises mutual reflection by clients and their diabetes educators, and consideration of what is important to clients as a priority.

The professional development for diabetes educators will focus on learning knowledge and skills to use the GSD program online, facilitation of 4-6 interactive online sessions with adult clients with diabetes, and an assessment for ADEA endorsement.

The educational program involves e-learning, practical skill development with individual and group feedback, practice with real clients, and assessments. As a diabetes educator, you will draw on your practical knowledge and experience to develop knowledge and skills in facilitating GSD conversations with those who have lost motivation to manage their own diabetes.

If you are a diabetes educator with more than 2 years' experience in diabetes care, this program is for you.
